
IPMA Releases 2014 ICB4 Survey Results

June 1, 2014: Amsterdam, The Netherlands. Reinhard Wagner, IPMA VP of Standards, Research and Awards, with the support of the ICB4 Project Team, recently announced the public availability of the summary results of an extensive survey for ICB4, the fourth release of the IPMA ICB®, the Individual Competence Baseline.

The ICB4 project team has been working on the structure, definitions and support materials for ICB4 since early 2011, and surveyed professional programme and project managers to discern trends, innovations, priorities, preferences and perceptions about our profession. This sense of stakeholder engagement and attention to customer needs is one reason why IPMA's standards tend to have nine or ten year lifespans.

Survey Drawing Winner

ICB4 Project Secretary and Project Lead Tim Jaques (at right) announced the survey results and drew the Survey respondent winner at the March Council of Delegates meeting in Toronto, Canada.

The survey ran in February-March 2014. To increase engagement, IPMA offered a drawing for an iPad Mini for those who completed the survey. An IPMA member from Egypt (her name not publicized) won the drawing. She is an IPMA Level C® Certified Project Manager, and her husband is also an IPMA Level C® Certified Project Manager. Congratulations!

About the Survey

"This survey demonstrates the need for true competency based PM certifications. In today's world of faster business cycles and projects, having a strong team is more important than ever," said IPMA Vice President Reinhard Wagner. "These results directly support the long term goals of IPMA to make our certification process even more relevant and effective for individuals."

"Our goal for the survey is to gather evidence that will help IPMA define the market needs and desires for a new, even better, Individual Competency Baseline," said Tim Jaques, ICB Project Secretary and Product Lead. "We have received some excellent feedback and insights that will help us to shape the forthcoming ICB4."

Summary Survey Results Are Available Now

While the ICB4 Project team scours the survey responses and insights, IPMA Member Associations—and their Standards, Education and Certification bodies--will also receive the detailed results. A summary of the survey results is available to the public and to respondents, at the IPMA website. Just click this link to download the Survey Summary.

And, we are beginning a dialogue about the implications of the survey findings at the IPMA LinkedIn Group. That dialogue begins with this announcement of the availability of the results (Please note: a LinkedIn and IPMA group login is required to see and participate in these discussions).
